KENANSVILLE SIDE-KNIFE

This Kenansville made side-knife came from the family and direct decedents of Thomas A Fleming of Concord; Cabarrus County, NC. Fleming was a Private in "A" Co. North Carolina 52nd Infantry. He enlisted 5/14/1862; was wounded at Gettysburg; was a Prisoner-of-War; and Furloughed 12/9/1864. It is not known if he had this knife at Gettysburg or when captured.

The knife is 20 inches long with a 14-3/4" long by 1 3/4" wide spear-point blade that matches identified examples made by Louis Froelich, C.S. Armory, Kenansville, North Carolina. On page 86 of the book "Confederate Bowie Knives" by Jack Milton; Josh Phillips & John Sexton, there is an image of a knife with the same blade design. However, this one is a little different with a carved slabbed grip and a unique brass cup shape guard that gives it a cutlass look. The guard has great casting flaws and hammer marks, and is tight with amazing patina; the grip is firm with three steel pins; and the blade has great untouched patina. This is totally original and the only know Kenansville knife in this configuration.

52nd Regiment, North Carolina Infantry

52nd Regiment, North Carolina Infantry completed its organization at Camp Mangum, near Raleigh, North Carolina, in April, 1862. Its members were raised in the counties of Cabarrus, Randolph, Gates, Chowan, Stokes, Richmond, Wilkes, Lincoln, Stanly, and Forsyth. The unit fought at Goldsboro, then moved to Virginia where it was brigaded under Generals Pettigrew, Kirkland, and MacRae. It fought with the Army of Northern Virginia from Gettysburg, had 2 killed and 25 wounded in the fight at Bristoe, and surrendered with only 6 officers and 60 men.

History

The 52nd North Carolina Regiment was formed in 1862. Originally, they were part of the Dept. of North Carolina. They were transferred to the Army of Northern Virginia just before Gen. Lee's Northern Invasion into Pennsylvania. They were assigned to Brig. Gen. J.J. Pettigrew's Brigade, Heth's Division, Hill's Corps. Pettigrew's Brigade was heavily engaged July 1st at Gettysburg against the Union I Corps. After heavy fighting and casualties, they helped force the Union I Corps to retreat thru the streets of Gettysburg to Cemetery Hill. Pettigrew's Brigade suffered very heavy losses the first day and were held in reserve July 2nd at Gettysburg. On July 3rd, Gen. Pettigrew assumed command of Gen. Heth's division due to Gen. Heth's head wound received July 1st. The 52nd N.C., along with Gen. Pettigrew's entire division, were temporarily transferred to Lt. Gen. James Longstreet's command and were assigned the left-wing position of the Pickett-Pettigrew-Trimble Charge at the Union center on Cemetery Hill. Suffering major casualties, they were forced to retreat. They were assigned the rear guard of the Army of Northern Virginia during Gen. Lee's retreat back to Virginia. Brig. Gen. Pettigrew was mortally wounded during the retreat when fighting near Falling Waters, Maryland. The 52nd continued fighting at battles such as Bristoe, Wilderness, Battle of the Crater, Petersburg, and others for the remainder of the war and surrendered at Appomattox along with the rest of the Army of Northern Virginia in 1865. The unit surrendered 60 men and 6 officers.
